At present, the Centre and the industry have recognised future needs of pilots, especially after domestic airlines have started to place mega orders for aircraft acquisition.

Gupte said the aerospace major has decided to invest $100 million in infrastructure and programmes catering to the need for training facilities in India. The initiative comes as the company forecasts India to require 31,000

20 years to fly those airplanes," Gupte said. "It's our goal that as many of those pilots as possible be trained in India."

According to Gupte, the $100 million investment will support installation of hard infrastructure such as simulators and adoption of new training curriculum. In India, the investment will support the aerospace major's partnership with simulator training provider CAE.
